Athenian oracle, says the St. Louis Republic, the ancient Romans were so benefited by the work of the first barber that came to their city that they erected a statue to his memory.

Anciently barbers acted in the dual capacity of surgeons and hairdressers. In Rome they hung out basins at the end of poles, so that wounded soldiers and gladiators might observe them at a distance and know exactly where to go to find relief.

The parti-colored pole or staff is said to indicate that the barber did "bleeding," the colored stripes symbolizing the strings of ribbons that were wound around the patient's arm while he was being plebotomized.

Two hundred years ago English law compelled barbers to display a "blood pot on a striped pole, the whole to be surmounted with a symbolical cloth of red material."
